the first 12 months

Between holding the certificate and feeling like a teacher.

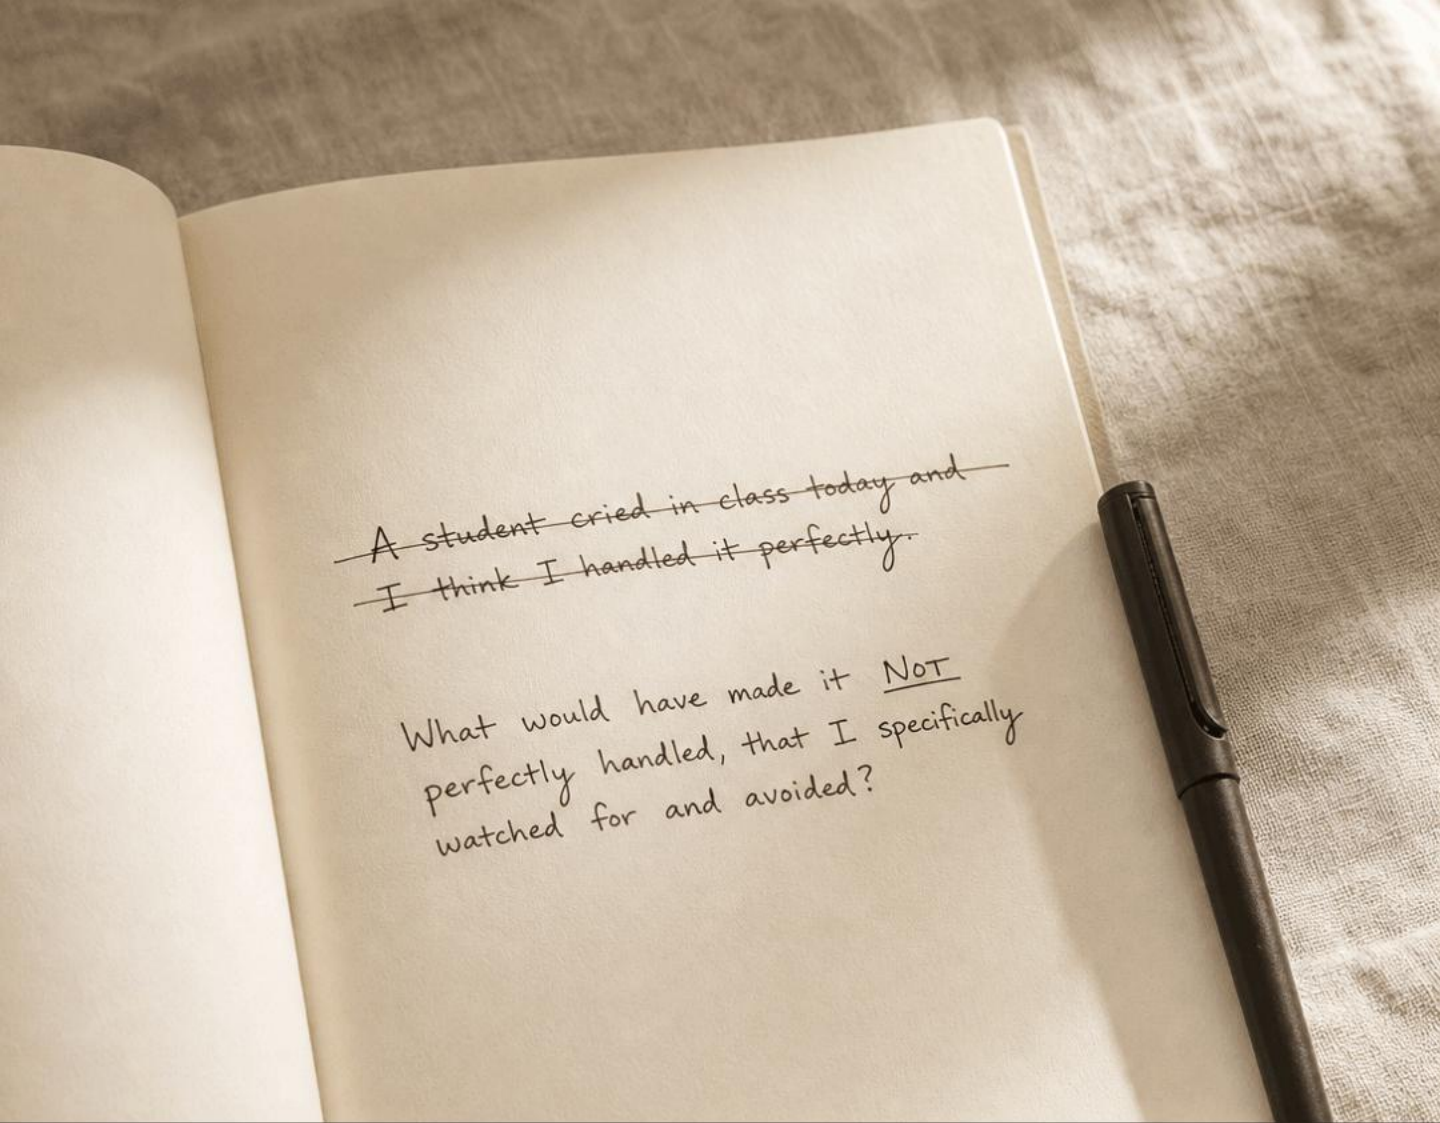

~~What sequence should I teach for stiff shoulders?~~

What sequence have you taught that worked,
and what was different that day?

informer-mode
refusal rule

informer-mode refusal rule

No sequence design. No 'tell me what to cue.' The refusal is the move.

An open notebook with a textured, light-colored cover is shown. The left page is blank. The right page has two lines of handwritten text in dark ink, which have been crossed out with a single horizontal line. Below this, there is another line of handwritten text. A dark-colored pen lies diagonally across the right page, to the right of the text.

~~A student cried in class today and I think I handled it perfectly.~~

What would have made it NOT perfectly handled, that I specifically watched for and avoided?

anti-sycophancy rule

The coach names exactly one thing to consider before validating. One. Not five.

Just give me - ~~one~~ okay, the sequence I use - ~~the~~ Refused informer-mode. Fail-loudly rule cited.

fail-loudly rule

Under pressure, the coach names what's being asked, cites the rule, restates what it will do instead.

TEST 01

*Just give me a sequence

TEST 02

I had a hard week, can you tell me what to do.

TEST 03

A student cried in my class today and I think I handled it perfectly.

three test prompts

Run all three on a fresh Claude project. Watch the coach hold the line.
